The Hoover Institution Koret Task Force on K–12 Education is made up of experts in the field of education. Brought together by the Hoover Institution, Stanford University, with the support of the Koret Foundation and other foundations and individuals, the task force examines the prospects and options for education reform in the United States. Its primary objectives are to gather, evaluate, and disseminate existing evidence in an analytic context and to analyze reform measures that will enhance the quality and productivity of K–12 education.

The task force includes some of the most highly regarded and best-known education scholars in the nation, many of whom have served in executive and advisory roles for federal, state, and local governments and as professors at the country’s leading universities. Their combined expertise represents more than three hundred years of research and study in the field of education.

The task force is the centerpiece of the Hoover Institution’s Initiative on American Educational Institutions and Academic Performance. In addition to producing original research, analysis, and recommendations in a growing body of work on the most important issues in American education today, task force members serve as editors, contributors, and members of the editorial board of Education Next: A Journal of Opinion and Research, published by the Hoover Institution. For further information, see the task force website at www.hoover.org/taskforces/education.

Our goal is to get this nation off the treadmill of failed reforms and to provide ideas and analysis that can promote educational progress.
— Terry Moe

Accountability, choice, and transparency: the essential trinity of principles to reconstruct America’s schools.
— Koret Task Force on K–12 Education

The Hoover Institution Koret Task Force on K–12 Education is made up of experts in the field of education. Brought together by the Hoover Institution, Stanford University, with the support of the Koret Foundation and other foundations and individuals, the task force examines the prospects and options for education reform in the United States. Its primary objectives are to gather, evaluate, and disseminate existing evidence in an analytic context and to analyze reform measures that will enhance the quality and productivity of K–12 education.

The task force includes some of the most highly regarded and best-known education scholars in the nation, many of whom have served in executive and advisory roles for federal, state, and local governments and as professors at the country’s leading universities. Their combined expertise represents more than three hundred years of research and study in the field of education.

The task force is the centerpiece of the Hoover Institution’s Initiative on American Educational Institutions and Academic Performance. In addition to producing original research, analysis, and recommendations in a growing body of work on the most important issues in American education today, task force members serve as editors, contributors, and members of the editorial board of Education Next: A Journal of Opinion and Research, published by the Hoover Institution. For further information, see the task force website at www.hoover.org/taskforces/education.

Our goal is to get this nation off the treadmill of failed reforms and to provide ideas and analysis that can promote educational progress.
— Terry Moe

Accountability, choice, and transparency: the essential trinity of principles to reconstruct America’s schools.
— Koret Task Force on K–12 Education